Dear D:

I am not quite sure to whom I am writing this letter: you in great appreciation or to potential students of your incredible shooting system and training. Having taken more than one thousand hours of firearms training from a myriad of well-respected schools, I have been exposed to many teachers and many systems. The techniques of the Israeli system are a true testament to a nation who has had to live through the unthinkable. What you have taught me is well thought out, very intuitive, very practical, and definitely invaluable. As I am also a student of Krav Maga, the hand-to-hand combat system of Israel, I have learned that the most useful self-defense comes from people who live the system daily and are dedicated to ultimately walking in peace. In all of my dozen years of martial arts training, from the Chinese arts of Shaolin Kung Fu to the knife-fighting of "Reality Defense," I am finding the Israeli approach to self-defense superior in many ways. Your training style exudes professionalism, focus, and dedication. In more simple terms, you're a great teacher. If I can be a referral or a reference for your skills, your training ability, or your choice of curriculum, feel free to give my name and number.

Thank you and keep up the great work.

Always on the front sight,

Nanette Kryske Towsley
